Title A case of tinea incognita and differential diagnosis of figurate erythema

Journal Medical Mycology Case Reports

Volume 18

Pages / Article-Number 8-11

Keywords Figurate erythema; Misdiagnosis; Tinea

A patient with tinea incognita; is presented together with a review of the literature of figurate erythema. Figurate lesions are emblematic for dermatology and perhaps the most picturesque efflorescences. The differential diagnosis can be broad and sometimes challenging. Many clinical entities with resembling primary and secondary efflorescences have to be considered as differentials and can be due to anti-infectious, paraneoplastic, allergic, autoimmune or other immune reactions.
