The RELIEN project is carried out by the universities of the Upper Rhine area, employment actors, associations and regional authorities. It aims to train employees and future employees (especially migrants and young people on the edges of marginalisation ) by providing them with information about the religion of others and informing them about the legal status of religious expressions in the workplace in the Upper Rhine area in order to ease tensions in companies and facilitate access to employment for a population that is likely to become marginalised. RELIEN contributes effectively to a rapprochement between religions and to the fight against all forms of religious fundamentalism and radicalism.
